Biographies

Meadow Schroeder, PhD, R Psych is an Associate Professor in the Werklund School of Education at the University of Calgary where she teaches online and face-to-face courses in Educational Psychology. She grew up in a rural community on Vancouver Island but has called Calgary home for 20 years. She is the former coordinator for a blended school psychology program, which has increased rural psychology capacity by providing access to training to many graduate students living and working in rural and remote settings. Her current research interests include the well-being of students with disabilities transitioning to post-secondary, self-regulated learning, issues in psychoeducational assessment, and classroom inclusion.

Amanda Lints-Martindale, PhD., C. Psych., grew up on a farm in rural Manitoba, and so working and living within a rural setting is a satisfying fit with her personal and professional values. She is currently an Assistant Professor with the Department of Clinical Health Psychology within the Max Rady College of Medicine at the University of Manitoba, with a cross appointment as consulting clinical psychologist with Southern Health-Santé Sud' community mental health program (a rural health region within Manitoba). She is a primary supervisor for the Rural Stream of the Clinical Health Psychology Predoctoral Residency, one of the only CPA-accredited rurally-focused psychology residency sites in Canada. She also serves as the Rural Lead for the Department of Clinical Health Psychology. Dr. Lints-Martindale co-chairs the Working Group on Dual Roles within Rural and Northern Canadian Psychology, an initiative that is in partnership with the Committee on Ethics within CPA. Her clinical and research interests focus on rural psychological practice, with an emphasis on improved access to psychological services for rural Canadians.

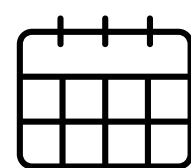

The Association of Psychology Newfoundland and Labrador (APNL) is approved by the Canadian Psychological Association to offer continuing education for psychologists. The APNL maintains responsibility for the program.
